Description of Problem or Suggestion:

New DID 604 does not address transition between releases. For example, how does operational responsibility phase from V0 IMS (which DAAC personnel are now responsible for) to Release A (where ECS personnel are supposed to assume responsibility) and then to Release B (where a new IMS is released).

Originator's Recommendation

Create a third section which specifically describes how operation concepts will transition from one release to another on a site-specific basis, and inter-site coordination.

We agree with the importance of a well thought out transition plan. At the DAAC Managers meeting in ORNL (3/29/95), some thoughts were presented by the ECS contractor on operational transition of releases. It was suggested that an operational transition notebook be generated and maintained at each of the DAACs that is form a DAAC-specific point-of-view. This is based upon previous experience of transitioning system releases at multiple sites. The operational transition notebook would include schedules, roles and responsibilities, procedures, etc. This notebook would be updated and maintained up to the point of transition. This recommendation is under consideration by ESDIS and the DAAC managers and, if accepted, would be the vehicle to address transition from one release to another instead of DID 604. DID 604 is delivered at CDR and will not be updated in near real time as would be done in the transition notebook. We will reference the operational transition notebook in DID 604.
